A pandemic strikes a diverse nation like the coronavirus that causes pneumonia transmission, spreads throughout the world and causes death or death. The term "pandemic" does not relate to the severity or fatality of a disease but rather the geographic extent of an outbreak which is related to individuals of a disease as well as the disease being new. There has been many to the whole global population of 7.5 billion.

The coronavirus pandemic has struck Nigeria and other countries like a storm of contagion. People are no longer functioning like they normally do. On the 15th of April 2020, the first confirmed case of COVID-19 was reported in Nigeria. To date, 471 cases have been confirmed, 153 have been discharged and 100 cases deaths have been recorded in Nigeria. Currently, the outbreak in some states has started to subside due to the actions of their state government.

Meanwhile, the situation of a lockdown and restriction of movement in Nigeria has had some effects over the past few days. One:

The increased cost of essential materials, some companies may use this as a medium to make profit due to the lockdown situation. Just like the popularity of "Coronavirus" has been using the lockdown to carry out anti-social behaviour and some unethical too.

Some people are left to die of hunger. People who barely afford to eat, spare more than to take steps or even buy a bottle of daily necessities.

order to make their money. Also when these people are forced to stay at home, it becomes a problem to them because they need to find food in order to survive.

To bring about domestic violence, Nigeria has gone into lockdown to stop the spread of coronavirus, the most effective to date. This has led to the vulnerability of people and their lives. As it is said somewhere in Nigeria, a video was posted showing a group of young Nigerians kidnapping a truck full of food items to be delivered and some could be seen fighting among themselves.

All we can do for now, is hope for the better, the government on their own should try to manage food products if some and lastly pray to God.
