In the public mind, the origin story of coronavirus seems well fixed: in late 2019 someone at the now world-famous Huanan seafood market in Wuhan was infected with a virus from an animal.

The rest is part of an awful history still in the making, with Covid-19 spreading from that first cluster in the capital of China’s Hubei province to a pandemic that has killed about 80,000 people so far.

Stock footage of pangolins – a scaly mammal that looks like an anteater – have made it on to news bulletins, suggesting this animal was the staging post for the virus before it spread to humans.

But there is uncertainty about several aspects of the Covid-19 origin story that scientists are trying hard to unravel, including which species passed it to a human. They’re trying hard because knowing how a pandemic starts is a key to stopping the next one.

Prof Stephen Turner, head of the department of microbiology at Melbourne’s Monash University, says what’s most likely is that virus originated in bats.

Apart from that the issue facing between the citizens and the military which is alarming, according to the reports from the news it is seen that the military is using the lockdown to abuse their citizens by flogging and punishing those who are caught outside which is wrong. Because it has lead to the killing of so many innocent citizens which the government is not handling.

Also the lack of money since there is lockdown in very state in Nigeria it's hard for citizens to move in their day to day activities to make money, and due to the lockdown business and shops are closed down making hard for Nigerians to cater for their needs.

But after all things said and done it's is advisable to stay home and be safe.
