

THE EFFECTS OF CORRUPTION IN OUR SOCIETY.

Corruption is a type of criminal activity undertaken by a person or organization assigned to a position of authority and frequently to gain unlawful advantage. The rate of corruption seems to change firmly crosswise over social orders notwithstanding for practically individual exercises. This essay will discuss the sources of corruption carried out at different field and its several impacts.

Firstly, low pay scale and unemployment plays an Important role in employee's which in turn results into corruption. When government officials receive low payment, the expecting quality of service gets lower. The more the compensation one gives, the more quality service one can get. On that case, poor people suffers most than the rich people. Then, excessive corruption found to be correlated with lack of meritocratic recruitment and absence of skilled training, e.t.c. Ultimately the society is affected. Accordingly, the qualified candidate remains unemployed. Moreover, legitimacy cannot be utilized for the advantage of the society. Ultimately, the society's progression is significantly hampered by corruption. Low pay scale and unemployment then makes needy individuals progressively poor and eventually the way of life of individuals cannot maintain the standard of healthy and hygienic lifestyle due to increasing expenses which leads to an underdeveloped and unhealthy society. Transparency International ranked Nigeria as one of the most corrupt countries in the world. Citizens of significantly corrupted countries like Nigeria has very low standard of life because of poverty and unemployment due to excessive corruption in Government than countries that are least corrupt have a healthier socioeconomic status. Hence, rich countries become more developed whereas poor countries stay poor.

Also, the next possible cause of corruption is lack of strict punishment due to absence of transparency. Transparency known as a motto, influence public discourse about corruption and clarity of information. Apprised decisive to democracy, its related to political and economic life as well as a private life. Rules and regulations are required to sustain a trustworthy system and to prevent devastating conflicts and absence of these things in the system, increase the rate of corruption in judicial system occurs by lack of transparency. Transparency International established a point that although majority of the society are unable to get equal and effective judicial services, powerful individuals can easily escape absence of transparency resulting excessive costs, bias, fears and unfair judges.

In Conclusion, corruption is a criminal activity and so therefore every one in the society should try their possible best to eradicate this unlawful act to bring about a positive change in our society.
